the 1990s, the number of people in the UK who are aged 65 and over has increased from 10.5 million to 13.5 million, and the number of people aged 75 and over has increased from 4.5 million to 6.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000). The number of people aged 65 and over is expected to increase to 16.5 million by 2020, and the number of people aged 75 and over to 8.5 million (Office for National Statistics 2000).

There is a growing awareness of the need to address the needs of older people, and the need to ensure that they are able to live independently and actively in their own homes. This has led to a number of initiatives, including the development of the concept of 'active ageing' (World Health Organization 1999), and the development of the concept of 'age-friendly communities' (World Health Organization 2002).

The concept of 'active ageing' is defined as the process of maximizing the health, participation, and security of older people (World Health Organization 1999). The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is defined as communities that are designed to meet the needs of older people (World Health Organization 2002).

The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is based on the idea that older people should be able to live independently and actively in their own homes. This requires a range of services and facilities, including housing, transport, and social services. The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is also based on the idea that older people should be able to participate in community activities and decision-making.

The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is also based on the idea that older people should be able to live in a safe and secure environment. This requires a range of services and facilities, including housing, transport, and social services. The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is also based on the idea that older people should be able to live in a community that is supportive and caring.

The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is also based on the idea that older people should be able to live in a community that is inclusive and diverse. This requires a range of services and facilities, including housing, transport, and social services. The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is also based on the idea that older people should be able to live in a community that is respectful of their dignity and rights.

The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is also based on the idea that older people should be able to live in a community that is accessible and convenient. This requires a range of services and facilities, including housing, transport, and social services. The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is also based on the idea that older people should be able to live in a community that is easy to navigate and use.

The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is also based on the idea that older people should be able to live in a community that is safe and secure. This requires a range of services and facilities, including housing, transport, and social services. The concept of 'age-friendly communities' is also based on the idea that older people should be able to live in a community that is free from discrimination and harassment.
